Bob Brown Conservation Area

About This Area
Bob Brown Conservation Area in Holt County, 2.5 miles west of Forest City, off state Highway 111.

The area, named for the late Robert A. Brown, a St. Joseph conservationist, consists of 3,307 acres of bottomland and is bounded by the Missouri River for 3.5 miles. The rich bottomland soils support mixed lowland hardwood forest, and also are planted with cool- and warm-season grasses and agricultural crops. A major portion of the land is restored Missouri River wetlands, which provide habitat for migrating waterfowl as well as resident species. The area is primarily managed to provide wetland habitat. The area’s proximity to Loess Bluff National Wildlife Refuge (5 miles) provides excellent opportunities to observe bald eagles, shorebirds and migratory waterfowl. Wildlife viewing is encouraged. Public use is allowed throughout the year, but non-hunters are prohibited from the waterfowl shooting area during waterfowl hunting season, unless they are members of a hunting party authorized to use the area and remain with the group.

Peak time for viewing waterfowl occurs in mid-November and mid-March. Pedestrians will find good wildlife viewing from the levee roads and trails. Mid-March to early April usually offers an excellent opportunity to view waterfowl in their breeding plumage.

Things to Do
• Hunting. The area features excellent hunting for waterfowl and pheasants and good hunting for deer, quail and dove.
• Fishing. The wing dikes along the adjacent Missouri River offer good fishing opportunities for catfish, carp and buffalo.
• Camping is available in designated areas only.
• Hiking. Walk the banks of the Missouri River or the field access roads, when waterfowl season is not open.
• Nature study and wildlife viewing. Birdwatching is best during early fall and late winter, outside of the waterfowl season.
